RESUME OF VIRGINIA'S HISTORIC SHERIFFS.
From a condition, threatening an almost total obliteration of much that is most desirable to cherish for reasons of history and of a just pride of lineage, the women of Virginia are now coming to the rescue. They are doing what they can to save the records of the past, and the churches that have survived from the colonial period to restore and preserve inscriptions in church yards and cemeteries; to collect and insure the preservation of parish and county records, and other interesting manuscripts and documents; to find and keep the furniture and household effects of the old time, and, in short, to save everything of antiquarian significance. When due regard has been expressed for all that was destroyed beyond recovery from 1800 to 1865, and for the far greater loss due to the recent war, it is still true that Virginia is remarkably rich in surviving historical objects and materials. The task of checking the further process of destruction is one in which the daughters of Virginia desire the encouragement of the whole nation. — Review of the
